The Eighth of a Series of Beautiful Pictures Reproduced by Color Photography to be Given Away with THE SUNDAY JOURNAL

"ROYAL SPORT"

Hunting has been the pastime of ages, and in this peculiar form of diversion the dog has been the staunch friend and ally of the hunter. By common acceptance, moreover, the nobler the game the more fascinating the sport. It is a recognition of this fact that suggested the subject for Edmund H. Osthaus's beautiful picture, "Royal Sport," reproduced by color photography as one of the Journal series. A magnificent hunting dog is depicted holding in his mouth a pheasant, which he is bringing to his master. Dog and game are painted with an absolute fidelity to nature, betraying a most intimate acquaintance on the part of the artist with the subjects he is handling. With fine consideration of what artists call the economy of labor, Mr. Osthaus has suggested more than he has carried out in detail. I tile more than the wistful, intelligent head and shoulders of the dog have been transferred to the canvas, and as a background only enough of the grass and brushwood has been painted to give a pleasing vignette effect to the picture. It is just such a work as would gladden the heart of a master of animal portraiture. A simple act of intelligent brute service, such as would appeal to every lover of sport, is depicted, and the correct drawing, the fine postraiture and the faithfulness of coloring, make the picture nothing less than a masterpiece. The color scheme of the original is such as to make the reproduction by color photography an exquisite piece of workmanship. Not the slightest tone or quality of the original is lost, and the superb reproduction is set off to the best advantage by the rich dark mat which forms its setting. It is a picture for the library, the dining room or the den, and one the average person would like to live with.

This Beautiful Picture in Colors and MOUNTED ON A MAT will be given Free with the Sunday Journal, August 18, 1901.
